ssh and press enter.
Generate the key and copy the contents to the clipboard (e.g. xsel).
Paste the contents to the authorized keys file of the MySQL server.
SSH to MySQL server
Now that your SSH keys have been added to the MySQL server, you can use them to log into the server.
Open a terminal.
Type `ssh-copy-id -i ~/.ssh/id_rsa_varchar_rw username@mysql.varchar_rw`. This copies the SSH keys from your current session to the MySQL server (the username you entered will also be replaced).
Note : The MySQL server must be restarted for the new SSH keys to be recognized.
Oracle
Oracle's authentication system is based on an inbuilt table named ``mysql``. The main table contains many entries that relate to MySQL databases. Table ``mysql.user`` is in particular of interest. Many of the values stored in the ``mysql.user`` table are used for configuring users and their privileges. As the name suggests, the values that relate to users are stored in the ``mysql.user`` table. The following steps show how to set a MySQL user for connecting to a MySQL server via Oracle.
Note : The user should be created after installation of Oracle Database 11g.
