The present invention relates to a musical sound generating device and in particular, to a musical sound generating device for generating a musical sound in accordance with a plurality of musical sound waveforms. A conventional musical sound generating device of the type described above typically uses a microprocessor of a personal computer to generate musical sounds of various pitch and timbre in accordance with a musical sound waveform stored in the memory of the personal computer. However, if the capacity of the memory is not sufficient to store musical sound waveforms of all the desired notes or the like, the musical sound generating device of the personal computer type described above will not be able to generate the desired musical sound. To avoid this problem, there has been proposed a musical sound generating device of a tone generator type in which a plurality of musical sound waveforms are recorded as data on a magnetic tape. However, since the conventional musical sound generating device of the magnetic tape type has a structure in which a plurality of musical sound waveforms are read out from the magnetic tape one by one, a problem exists in that the generation time of a musical sound is prolonged and the burden on the operator who controls the musical sound generating device is increased.
