From a huge investment to a silly name, they're a lot to take in all at once. But it's not all bad, and Crackle is a site worth watching if you're looking for a solid streaming site with a ton of free content. What is Crackle? Founded by Chad Hurley and Steve Chen in 2005, Crackle is a site dedicated to streaming content over the internet. In addition to serving up their own videos, Crackle hosts content from a ton of other services. Their library includes content from Hulu, Vevo, CBS, Crunchyroll, and many more. Some of their biggest content partners are PBS, HBO, and ABC. Similar to Vevo, Crackle's videos are professionally-produced but in very different ways. They don't show off the insane popularity of a Hollywood film like Vevo does, and they usually just contain videos that people submitted themselves. However, they have the added benefit of a built-in audience to accompany their videos, so if you're lucky, you can turn some people into a fan of the film you're streaming. What are the best services to watch on Crackle? Crackle is built around content from other services and has a decent enough library to be worth checking out. We've organized our selection of videos by the service they come from, but all are compatible with Crackle's interface. Vimeo: Vimeo is the service Crackle has partnered with to host all the videos on
