[Adult respiratory distress syndrome after craniocerebral injury]. Our aim was to present the incidence and mortality from ARDS (Adult Respiratory Distress Syndrome) in patients with craniocerebral injury (CCI) and the characteristics of patients suffering from CCI who developed ARDS. As part of our investigation, we retrospectively analysed the data of 152 patients (89 men and 63 women) admitted to the hospital in the period from March 2006 to January 2010. Patients with a history of pulmonary disease and chronic drug therapy were excluded from the study. Clinical features, APACHE II (Acute Physiology and Chronic Health Evaluation II) score, imaging studies (chest X-ray, chest CT), arterial blood gas analysis (ABGA), arterial and venous blood flow values as well as the severity of coma, were analysed in CCI patients with and without ARDS. There were 94 male and 58 female patients with a mean age of  $52.0 \pm 16.9$  (range, 15-85) years. Fifty-one (33.1%) patients were admitted to the Intensive Care Unit (ICU), and their mean age was significantly higher. All patients had a cerebrovascular accident and 37 (24.3%) had a history of cardiovascular diseases. One hundred and nineteen (76.0%) patients received a hematoma evacuation, and 47 (31.1%) patients were operated on the cranial site. Focal brain edema was found in 100 (65.8%) patients. There were 6 (3.9%) cases of ARDS. The mortality of patients with ARDS was 83.3%. The mortality of patients without ARDS was 27.8%. ARDS is an important cause of increased mortality among patients with CCI. The development of ARDS occurs in the acute period, while being more frequent in the phase of brain damage.
