The objective of this project is to develop a new, state-of-the-art platform for drug development and discovery. This platform is designed to provide real-time, in-vivo, high-resolution optical imaging and molecular genetic analysis at the tissue level. The technology will be a high-resolution optical imaging device built around a miniature, hand-held microscope with diffraction-limited optics. This technology will enable the investigation of a wide variety of in vivo targets in rodents and primates. The specific aims of this project are to 1) develop an opto-chemical real-time, multispectral imaging device that combines the high-resolution imaging of fluorescence microscopy with the genetic analysis of PCR-based assays; 2) develop fluorescent proteins and organic dyes that can be used in conjunction with the opto-chemical imaging technology; 3) develop fluorescent probes, such as molecular beacons, that can be used with fluorescence-based imaging systems to specifically detect the presence and/or the expression of genes and proteins at the tissue level; and 4) optimize the imaging and analytical capabilities of the prototype instrument using two targets that are well characterized at the molecular level and readily imaged using current fluorescence imaging techniques. The opto-chemical imaging technology developed as part of this project is generic in nature and will be suitable for a wide variety of applications. This technology will be of particular use in studying 77a5ca646e
